Characters:

Lassendre: An orphan maid in the Emperor's palace, who has known the world as four sided walls and locked black windows since the day she was born. In this 17 years, she lived her days in pain, fearing her and her mother's death. The only person she loved, who taught her how to obey and survive in this disgusting place was put under the sword for a ridiculous reason last year. She couldn't even mourn her death to respect her mother's sacrifice. Yet, she also knew about the impaled angel by her owner, commander of Bahadrur's Army, who liked to drink alcohol so much.

Seraph'im: A miraculous entity, an angel from the heavens whose beauty is far more superior than the human kind. She has no gender, but has the look of a female. Her strength comes from the hope, hope of her surroundings. The first time she descended to the city, she had a little power. It was the first time that she felt such despair coming from the citizens. It was an impossible task for her to win with this power. Thus, she had to make people believe in her and hope for a new era. For this single reason, at first she concealed herself from everyone. Within her reach, she single handedly showed people her true self to make them believe in her. Days passed, she grew more powerful. Her followers showed unquestionable loyalty and believed that she can overthrow King Bahadrur. Yet, Bahadrur had eyes and ears everywhere. At first he only heard some rumors. Without being able to locate this "traitor" his anger grew more and more. More days passed and he finally found a chance. In a private meeting for the final plan of coup d'état, his soldiers invaded. After capturing and killing every single traitors with their family, he finally found a way to purge the Seraph'im. In his royal palace, he had a gift from hell. This gift was a necklace, which activates when somebody wears it. The moment he put this necklace on Seraph'im's neck, a thousand pikes impaled her body. Seraph'im, who lost all of her followers also lost her will to fight anymore. Without any power nor will, she shut herself and closed her mind in this room of retribution.

Ryoal the Front: Ryoal was only eight years old when he was recruited as a soldier in King Bahadrur's army. He did not know what happened to his family and he could not remember their faces anymore. Even though he was in his twenties, he participated in three wars which he was a frontline soldier in all of them. He got his title "the Front" by fighting and not dying in frontline. For years, he relentlessly killed his enemies. He didn't accept any promotions, and continued to fight with all his might. Other soldiers thought that he had a murderous intent that kept him killing more and more but nobody knew the real reason. He, who had no wish to live, just wanted to die in war. For this reason he volunteered to fight in front lines. Because he did not have the courage to kill himself, this method was suitable for him. Yet, he survived all of his clashes miraculously. He had only some slight injuries after he came to the city.

In one day, he was called by King Bahadrur himself. He had no idea about what he did, and he had no fear of what would've happened to him. When Bahadrur talked with him, it wasn't because he did a bad thing. The king wanted him to guard a secret place, the room of retribution since he was loyal and can be trusted. Before this conversation, he had no idea about Seraph'im. The more he learned about what he was going to guard, he became more interested. 30 years ago, a traitor died in this room with a thousand pikes impaled his body. He learned it was possible by a magical necklace, which curses the person who wore it. In his new position, days passed by guarding the room. His curiosity grew more and more, but he was not allowed to enter the room. On one day, when the other guard was sick, he guarded the room himself in night. He wanted to know who was he, since he should be the most courageous person in the world as he can report to Bahadrur. Ryoal entered the room when nobody was around. In the pure darkness, he held a torch to see the traitor's face. And everything happened at that moment.

She was not a traitor. She was a real angel, a miraculous entity. The moment he saw her, he knew he had to do something. "She should not be here, she does not deserve this." was the thing in his mind. He knew that if he wanted to rescue her, there was only a single thing that can be done. Without any hesitation, he pulled the necklace from her neck, but nothing happened. He tried to pull the pikes himself, but nothing happened. Then, he realised what to do. His unimportant life would get a meaning if he can use it for her. Thus, he put the necklace on his neck. A thousand pikes, moved from her to him.

He was impaled by a thousand pikes, and Seraph'im opened her eyes, again.
